

The Porch House (2), Potterne.

Is probably of 15th century construction, and supposed to have been an ecclesiastical residence. Its formation, material, open porch, gable, bay window, and its projecting storey, all proclaim it the work of a former age. Behind the plaster and ceilings which concealed them, was found beautiful tracery of windows and fine open roofs. It has suffered almost more than the wonted vicissitudes of old houses, for it seems to have served successively as a brewery, a bakehouse, a barrack, a public house, (bearing the sign of the "Pack Horse") and finally it was divided into four tenements.

Dear Emma this morning

Spent as also Cambridge here Capitalized the inauguration of my two older boys. Every quality I had before their arrival. I am extremely disappointed.
They are such good travellers and so interested in everything and not the least trouble. I hope Dorothy is well also the rest of your family. Lovingly Yrs. M. C. C. C.
